

Confession and Nation in the Era of Reformations. Central Europe in Comparative Perspective. (Eds.): Eva Doležalová, Jaroslav Pánek. Praha, Historický ústav 2011, 238 s. ISBN 978-80-7286-180-4

CONTENTS

Jaroslav P á n e k

Foreword – s. 7

Robert B. P y n s e n t

Czech Nationalism after Dalimil and before Huss – s. 9

František Š m a h e l

The English Rising of 1381, Wyclif and Lollards in the Czech point of view – s. 35

Anne H u d s o n

Aspects of Tradition in English Wycliffism – s. 53

Eva D o l e ž a l o v á

National and religious aspects of the Czech reform movement in the 14th and 15th centuries and of the Hussite revolution in the mirror of Western historiography – s. 63

Martyn R a d y

Jiskra, Hussitism and Slovakia – s. 77

Robert Š i m ů n e k

Toleration from necessity or from indifference? The role of faith in South Bohemia in the late Middle Ages – s. 91

Petr V o r e l

Nationality and confession in the political life under the Jagiellonian dynasty (Contribution by Vilém of Pernštejn to the formation of a new societal model) – s. 113

C. Scott D i x o n

Martin Luther and the German Nation: The Reformation and the Roots of Nationalism – s. 123

Jaroslav P á n e k

Nation and Confession in the Czech Lands in the pre-White Mountain Period – s. 139

R. J. W. E v a n s

Language and Politics: Bohemia in International Context, 1409–1627 – s. 155

Jaroslav M i l l e r

Legitimizing War: National Past as an Instrument of Protestant Propaganda in England and the Holy Roman Empire – s. 183

Eva K o w a l s k á

Confessional Exile and National Identity: The Slovak Case – s. 197

Svatava R a k o v á

Toleration as Principle or Necessity? The Case of the British Colonies in Seventeenth Century
North America – s. 209

Index – s. 229