INVITATION/CALL FOR PAPERS:

The apocalypse of the first World War brought fundamental changes in politics, economy, society but also psychology. A considerable part of the population came to the conclusion that capitalism had failed, which resulted in the call for a radical change of the social and economic establishment. One possible alternative was seen in the slogan of socialism; the forming Soviet system presented a challenge but other forms of radicalization existed as well in the leftist political spectrum. These processes faced the efforts to promote the development towards democracy but also attempts of the extreme right to seize power.

The objective of the conference is analysis of the development in radical Left in Central and East Europe in the interwar period until 1933, when coming of the Nazis to power in Germany substantially changed the structure and development of European political stage. Also welcome will be presentations about the development of the Left during World War I and immediately before. The conference sets its aim in examining the development of radical Left both in the aspect of particular countries and considering a wider regional prospect and comparison within Central and East Europe.

Considering the complexity and extent of the topic, we are going to focus, above all, on the following topic areas:

- Armed conflicts and violence (strikes, demonstrations, hunger marches, clashes with police forces);
- International co-operation;
- Relations between social-democratic and communist parties;
- Reflections in the media and public opinion (the press and attempts to influence opinions of the public).

Applicants can register before 15th September 2021.

In your application, please, give the title of your presentation and abstract up to 500 characters, as well as the institution where you work and your grades and titles in full.
